THE LIBRARY AND SOCIAL MOVEMENTS

It is of course generally conceded that the day has gone by when the library can be a store-house of the classics and of standard literature and nothing more. It is not enough that to these it adds literature that refreshes and amuses, poetry that pleases, and art that elevates. The librarian is not through when to these she adds work with children, with schools, with women's clubs. Every one of these features of library work is important, is indispensable, and must be present in every library.

We must remember that the world, politically, economically and socially is traveling at a tremendous rate. Methods of government, of business, of industries, of education, have changed essentially during even the last ten years. Political parties are striving to accomplish different things by different means. Legislators are invoking new devices to regulate human affairs. The universities, particularly in all branches of learning relating to the humanities, are occupying a field almost unknown a few years since. With the world of which it is a part moving at this gait, the library must move with it or drop behind. The chances are that if a library is being conducted as it was ten years ago, with the same methods, and the same material, it is at least nine years behind the times.

As a part of this progress has come the growth of an appreciation of every individual's duty to society. Under this conception, no man is at liberty to ignore the fact that he is responsible for the welfare of those with whom he comes in contact, that he shares with others the responsibility for the general condition of affairs; that it is just as much his duty to serve society as it is to serve himself or his family. This sense of social responsibility has resulted in many important social movements.

These modern movements have for their ultimate aim the good of the individual, separately and in the aggregate. They seek to care for the physical, mental and moral welfare of the individual. They seek to improve housing conditions, to care for health, to prevent tuberculosis and other similar diseases. They protect the man as he works by providing for hygienic conditions in factories, requiring safety devices, forbidding child labor, regulating the hours of labor for women, and in every way seeking to make wholesome conditions in the industries. These movements seek also to make the worker a more efficient industrial instrument, give him a training in trade schools, in agricultural colleges, in industrial schools, in university extension work and correspondence schools. They seek to help in a less directly utilitarian way through schools and colleges, libraries, traveling libraries, art galleries, parks, playgrounds, school centers and social centers. They attempt to aid him who is physically or morally deficient or unfortunate by providing truant officers, juvenile courts, probation officers, reformatories, hospitals and sanitariums.

These movements seek also to protect the economic welfare of the individual. They urge laws which regulate public service corporations, banking laws, insurance laws, and anti-trust laws. They seek to insure the future economic welfare of the country by all forms of conservation of the life, health and morals of the workers in the industries. Through industrial insurance and workmen's compensation acts they attempt to shift to society in general the burden resulting from the inevitable loss of life and limb in the industries.

They seek to improve the political conditions of the country. They provide for commission forms of government, for home rule for cities, for better and more scientific conditions of municipal and state affairs. They seek to secure better officials by regulation of elections, by the short ballot, by the election of United States senators by direct vote, by the recall, and by the civil service. They seek better laws by use of the initiative and referendum, by scientific study of legislation, by investigating committees and commissions. They seek a better administration of the law, organizing railroad commissions, tax commissions, and industrial commissions, and seek to simplify the form of court procedure.

Any institution that hopes for a prominent position in human activities must remember that these movements are to be reckoned with. Universities, colleges, academies, and public schools are teaching the principles involved in these movements. Periodicals are everywhere publishing the story of their progress. Political parties are placing in their platforms references to those of these movements that seem to invite popular approval. In many of the large cities the churches are active participants in these campaigns. If libraries and librarians do not enlist themselves, they will find themselves aloof from the procession and deprived of popular approval and support.

It is probably true that librarians generally recognize the necessity of taking part in general progress along these lines. They hesitate, however, to go into this field as fully as they might wish to do, feeling that their somewhat scant funds are pledged to the projects already embarked in. To meet this conception of the situation, two suggestions might be made.

The first suggestion is that this sort of work is so important that it cannot be pushed aside or made subordinate to other activities. It is the sort of work that the community is interested in and that the community demands. No work will better serve the community, and nothing will better demonstrate the value of the library. To do this work well is to attract the attention and command the commendation of the community—an attention and a commendation that will probably spell increased appropriation.

The second suggestion is that the intelligent, ingenious, and energetic librarian can supply her library with a wealth of material in all these lines at almost no expense. In fact, in this department there seems at last to be an opportunity for the librarian to get something for nothing. To carry out this second suggestion, there is published in this copy of the bulletin a list of publications upon social movements which may be secured with little or no expense. We commend the list hereafter given to the attention of every librarian in the state.

Miss Ono Mary Imhoff, of the Legislative Reference Library, has prepared the following list of material, free or obtainable at small expense, bearing on important social movements:
